

The Turkish Coast — A Voyage of Endless Discovery

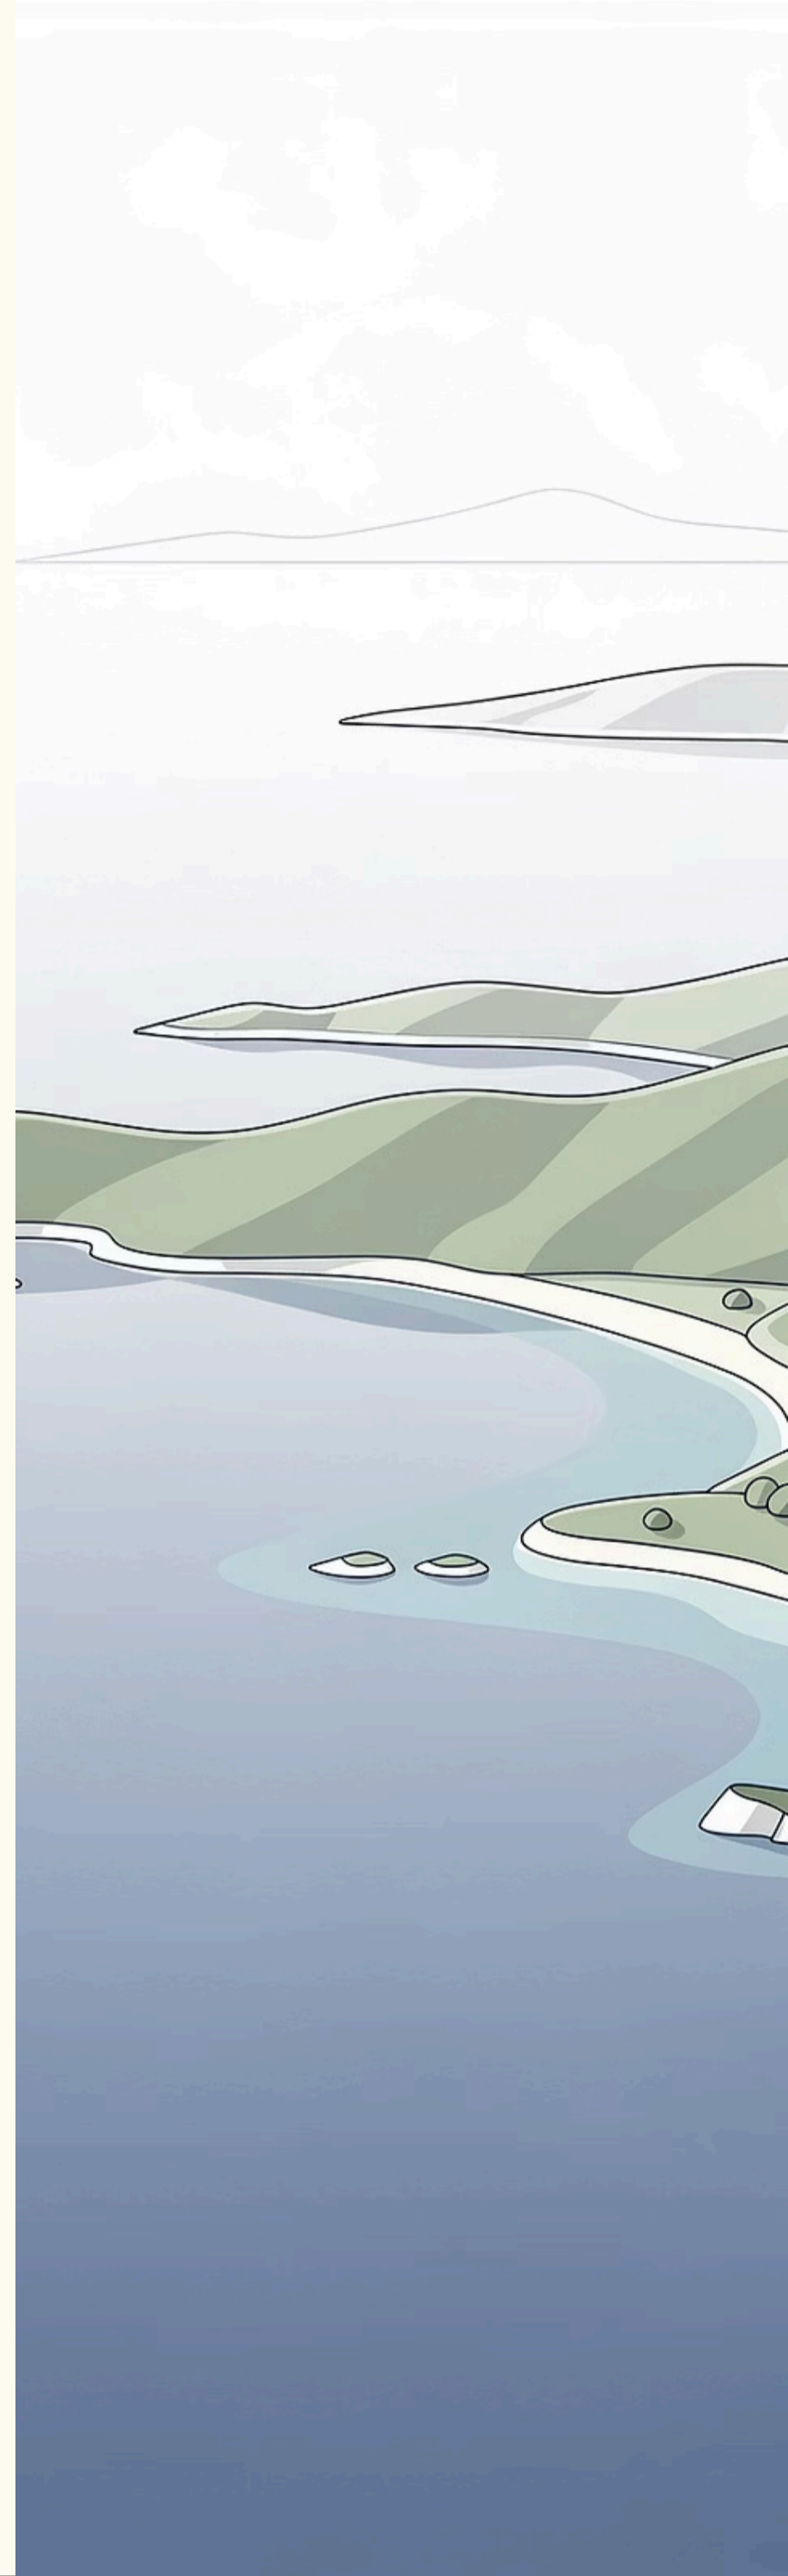

From the ancient harbour of Bodrum to the pine-scented shores of Göcek, the Turquoise Coast unveils itself as one of the Mediterranean's last great sailing frontiers — where solitary bays, warm hospitality, and breathtaking beauty await at every turn.

A Coastline That Never Stops Giving

The journey from Bodrum to Marmaris, Fethiye, Göcek and beyond is not a single destination — it is a continuous, ever-changing discovery. Rocky headlands give way to emerald coves; bustling fishing villages melt into silent, unspoilt anchorages where the only sounds are the lapping of water and the cry of a distant seagull.

Even in high season, the Turkish coast holds its secrets. Slip into a hidden bay and find yourself utterly alone, with nothing but the shimmer of turquoise water and the scent of wild thyme drifting down from the hills above.

Your Home on the Water

46-Foot Catamaran

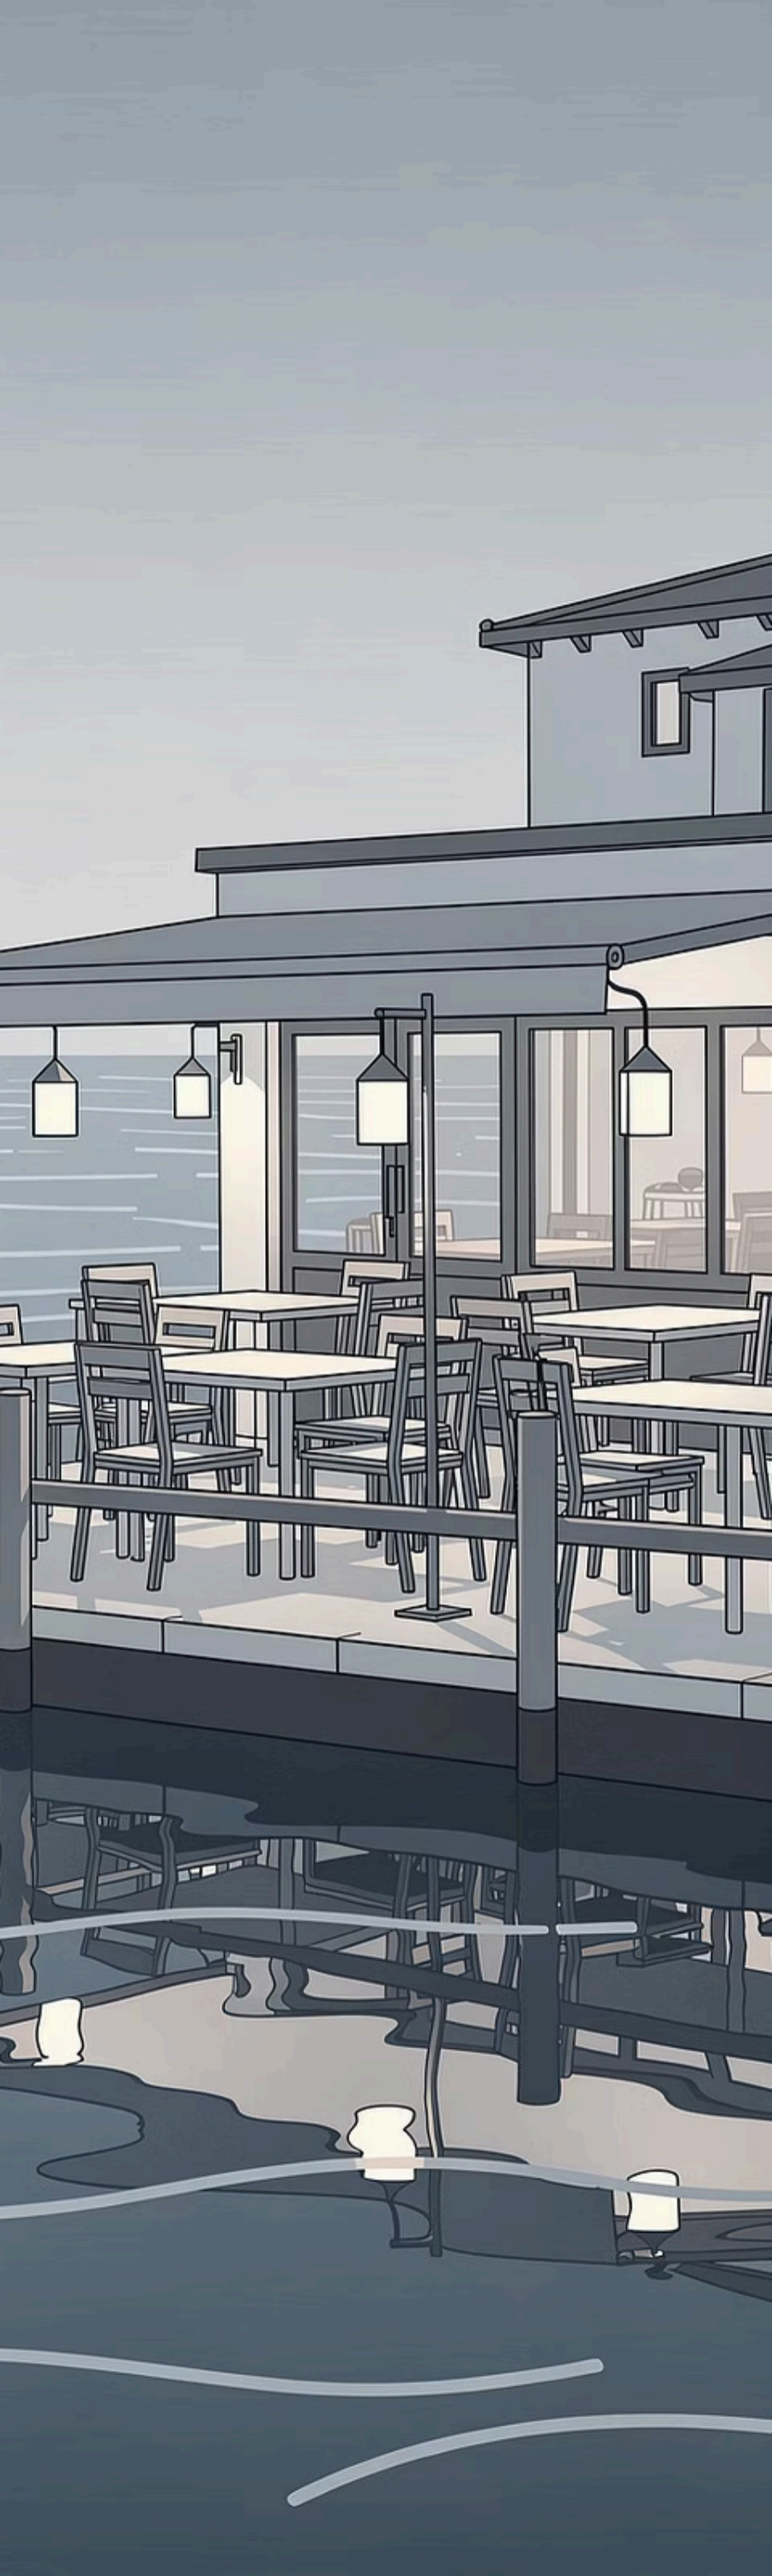

Perfectly sized for couples and small groups, offering generous living spaces, a wide sunbathing deck, and the agility to explore shallower anchorages that monohulls simply cannot reach.

51-Foot Catamaran

For those who desire the ultimate in space and comfort at sea — expansive saloon, full-beam cabins, and a vast cockpit perfect for long, leisurely evenings under a canopy of stars.

Both vessels are chosen for their absolute comfort and ease of navigation, allowing you to focus entirely on the pleasure of the journey rather than the mechanics of sailing.

Tavernas, Tastes & the Warmth of Turkish Hospitality

Flavours of the Near East

Fresh mezze, grilled fish straight from the sea, slow-cooked lamb, honey-soaked pastries — every harbour brings a new table and a new story to savour.

Hospitality Beyond Expectation

Turkish warmth is not a cliché — it is a lived experience. From the taverna owner who insists you try the house meze to the fisherman who waves you into the perfect mooring spot, generosity is woven into every encounter.

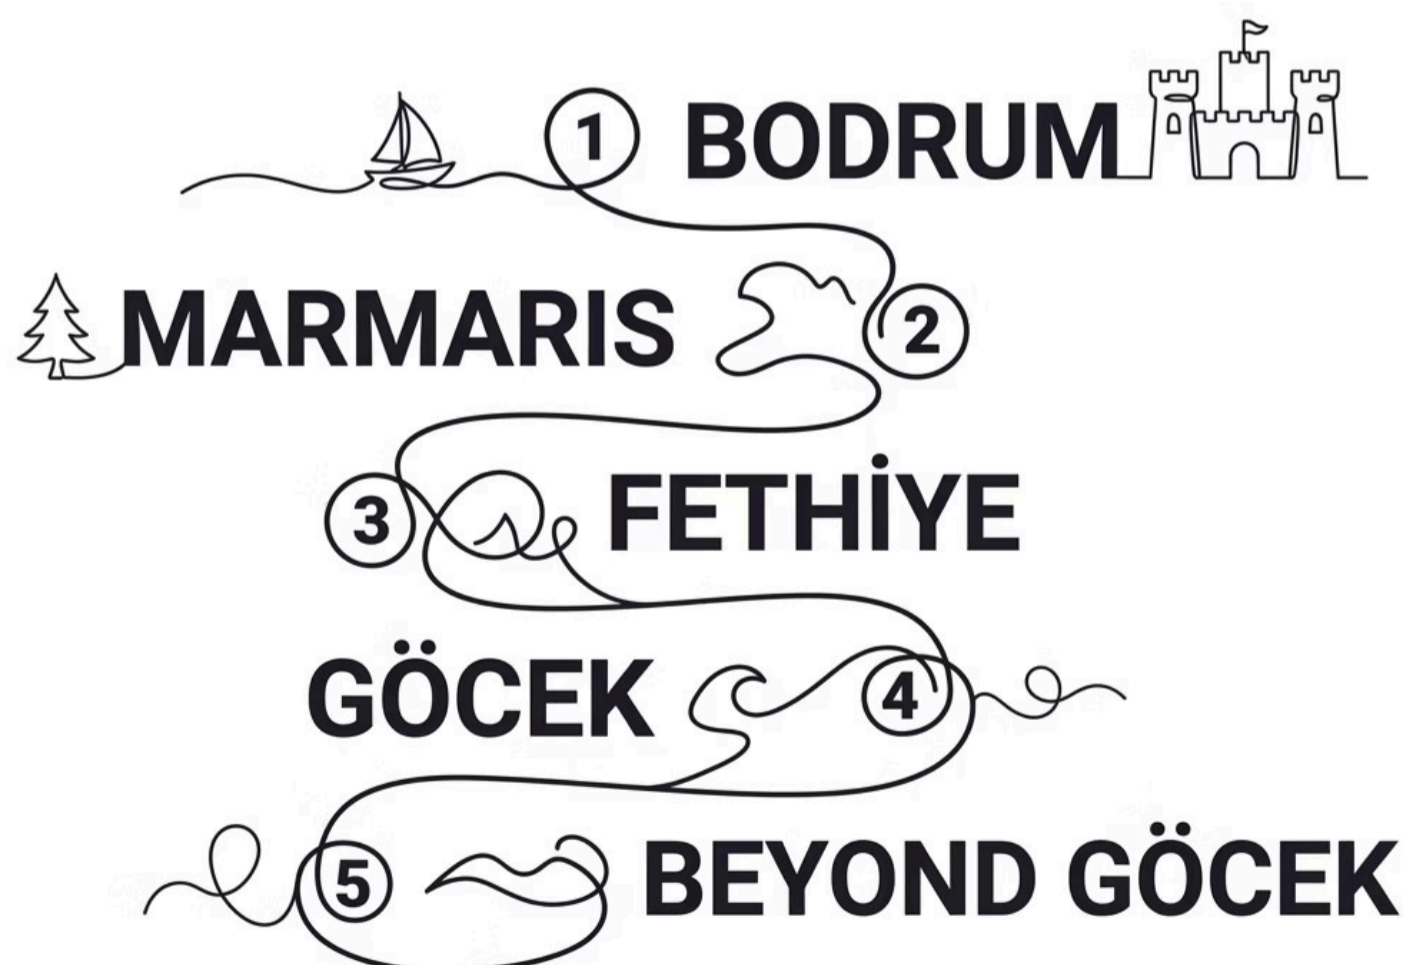

Scents That Linger

Pine resin, salt air, wild oregano, and charcoal smoke — the Turkish coast engages every sense and leaves an impression no photograph can fully capture.

Ports of Call Along the Turquoise Coast

Each stop on this itinerary has its own distinct character — from lively town quays to utterly deserted anchorages. The beauty of sailing here lies in the freedom to choose your own pace.

Solitude, Even in High Season

Some of the most beautiful bays along the Turkish coast remain miraculously quiet even at the height of summer — a rare and precious gift for the discerning sailor.

The secret lies in knowing where to look. With local expertise guiding your itinerary, you will sail past the crowded tourist marinas and into anchorages so serene they feel entirely your own. Drop the anchor in water so clear you can count the pebbles on the seabed six metres below, swim in silence, and watch the sun set over hills that have changed very little in a thousand years.

The Perfect Climate for the Perfect Holiday

The "Great Season" — May to October

The Turkish Aegean and Mediterranean enjoy one of the most reliable sailing climates in the world. Long, sun-drenched days, warm and settled winds, and water temperatures that invite you to swim at any hour of the day.

- Consistent Meltemi breezes for comfortable sailing
- Sea temperatures reaching 26–28°C in summer
- Over 300 days of sunshine per year
- Mild, pleasant evenings ideal for al fresco dining

When to Go

May & June —

Uncrowded, green, and gloriously warm. Ideal for those who prefer tranquillity and softer light.

September & October

— Perhaps the finest months of all. Warm seas, quieter anchorages, and a golden autumnal quality to the light that photographers dream of.

Getting There is Effortless

One of the great practical advantages of the Turkish coast is the ease with which you can reach it from anywhere in Europe. Choose the embarkation port that suits you best.

Board in Bodrum

Bodrum-Milas Airport (BJV) receives direct flights from major European hubs throughout the season — including London, Amsterdam, Frankfurt, Rome, and Zurich. The marina is just 30 minutes from the terminal.

Board in Marmaris

Dalaman Airport (DLM), just 90 minutes from Marmaris, is one of the busiest charter airports on the Turkish coast, with direct connections to virtually every European capital city.

Whichever gateway you choose, you will be stepping aboard your catamaran within hours of leaving home — with the sea already glittering in front of you.

Why This Has Become One of Our Favourite Proposals

"It conquers everyone, effortlessly — and that is the highest recommendation we can give."

We have sailed many seas and curated many itineraries, but the Turkish coast holds a special place. It is the rare destination that delivers more than it promises — to seasoned sailors and first-time charterers alike. The combination of spectacular scenery, extraordinary food, genuine human warmth, and a climate that almost never disappoints makes this a holiday that guests return to, year after year, bringing friends and family along to share the magic.
